munication between the murdered woman and Marie Collins. After the crime had been committed and the principal had removed his bloody collar and shirt, and had used a towel to remove bloodstains from his clothing, the person or persons involved left by the kitchenette door, locked it from the outside and carried the key away.

Key Missing.

The key to the kitchenette door has been missing since the day of the crime. When the police who were first on the scene tried to go out into the areaway outside the kitchenette, they found the door locked, with no key in sight. One of the policemen picked the lock with a skeleton key. The door now is locked from the inside, with a bolt. The common door which fastened the door when the murder was discovered in un-

The back of the house is entirely open, and it was possible for any one to enter and leave the apartment without observation. The kitchenette doors opens on a landing of the fire tower, and some distance away a short flight of steps leads to the areaway. The apartment house is separated from the next building by a driveway, which is open, and gives

Firetower Help to Parties.

By use of the firetower it was possible for Miss Collins and the murdered girl to pass from one apartment to the other without observation. The firetower formed an easy way for the com-pletion of "parties" when another girl was necessary.

The detectives, spending most of their time in trying to shield from publicity ertain prominent men who knew the Colbert woman intimately, have over-looked many details which appear to Colbert those who first examined the apartments

Two Involved.

Despite the story first "handed out" by the detectives, it has been shown to a point of certainty that at least two persons were involved in the murder, one striking the blows and taking the principal part, and the other helping to carry the body from the sitting m, where the actual crime took place to the bedroom, where the body was found lying on the bed.

The person who struck the blows, and whose clothing was covered with blood spots so that the blood soaked through on the shirt, which was badly stained carried the woman by the shoulders when she was taken to the bedroom. It is hardly possible that the body was carried by one person, because of cer-tain conditions about the bed and of the shirt itself.

Several started out to investigate clues which had come to them per-sonally, and out of which they hoped to bring valuable developments.

Woman Questioned.

There continued to be a number visitors at the detective bureau in connection with the mystery.

One was a well-dressed woman, two were men whose appearance in-dicated they were persons of wealth. They were said to have known Miss Colbert's through the second and wanted to get a lawyer to defend him on a charge of murder.
